With President Trump's son now deeply embroiled in the Russian interference scandal, momentum against his administration is building. Dr Binoy Kampmark reports.

The momentum against the Trump administration is building and it should come as no surprise that it comes via the least original of avenues: the Russians did it and someone must pay. For decades, the feared Russian has played a vital role in shaping U.S. paranoia and a domestic landscape famous for its reactionary bursts and fearful lurches.

That paranoia has assumed galloping proportions. The U.S. president's approach to this assertion has been confused and varied. There is nothing surprising in this: from blanket, emphatic denial about any connections even smelling of a Russian touch, Trump has stated another variant of denial. He claims ignorance over his son's attempts to tap Russian sources for electoral gain, notably that with lawyer Natalia Veselnitskaya, which revealed squat in the scheme of things.

What, then, is the problem with Donald Trump Jr? Negotiating his way out of a brown paper bag, for one. In June 2016, he received word from Rob Goldstone, manager of Azerbaijani pop figure Emin Agalarov, outlining Russian interest to supply the Trump campaign with 'official documents' of a 'very high level' nature against Hillary Clinton 'as part of Russia and its government support for Mr Trump'.

"If it's what you say I love it." Last June, Donald Trump Jr. was told via email of a Russian govt effort to aid his father's campaign. pic.twitter.com/fXoHC1kNyL

Such an attitude confuses the need for advanced political prescience to hold the business instinct in check while embracing the business instinct. In retrospect, I probably would have done things a little differently with a near mindless rapacity. Source was less relevant than impact; motivation for the supplier was less significant than the use it would be put to by the recipient. The most important why of a political approach should be appraised of everything? The Trump campaign should have done, suggests one line of argument. Is it to follow the approach taken by Tom Downey, formerly a hardy in an effort to undermine presidential candidate Douglas.

September 14, 2000, Downey received an anonymous package with over 120 pages of planned debate stratagems (Bush was, after all, such a debater) along with George W. Bush's efforts at practising. Downey and his lawyer immediately surrendered the best scan material to the FBI and the world was spared a round of laughs about the skills of a future president. „pursue a similar course dancing with the devil“

The Trump Jr email on „witch hunt“ is unacceptable. A short change of initials does not alter what originally is. Poor collusion may itself risk letting Trump off the hook. by taking meetings with enemies, you grant your enemy leverage over your campaign. It was a political spectrum. It's not that corruption, collusion or entertaining interests deemed inimical to the state do not take place in rampant, easygoing fashion: it's the fact that Trump has become something of a realisation. French's argument suffers in ignoring the obvious point of U.S. officials for that electoral interference, or dancing with foreign devils for local advancement. is the
