

SA Royal Commission: Who wants to be a nuclear billionaire?

By Noel Wauchope

1 October 2015

Noel Wauchope navigates the complex web of ambiguity behind submissions to South Australia's Nuclear Fuel Chain Royal Commission.

SOME PROMOTERS of nuclear industry expansion have very altruistic motivations.

Just who are the people who want South Australia to be a nuclear industry hub? The submissions to the Royal Commission give some indications, though it is not easy to work this out.

The Commission's website publishes submissions but in a confusing way. Their numbering of submissions is meaningless, as they will bundle several from one source together, counting them as just one.

In other cases, all four of a person's submissions appear separately and some are omitted altogether. (I, for example, sent in four separate submissions on the four separate topics, but only two were published.)

If the numbers are confusing, the names are even more so. Organisations and companies are listed alphabetically; individuals are also listed alphabetically but in order of the person's first name, making it hard to find a particular person's submission.

I have therefore chosen to number the submissions according to each person or organisation whose submission or submissions are published, coming up with 173 submitting, of which 94 are in favour of nuclear development. The 79 that are not in favour come from a variety of sources and express a variety of arguments — about environment, Aboriginal rights, health, economics, safety, terrorism, weapons proliferation risks and the preference for renewable energy.

The pro-nuclear submissions on the whole, come from the same parties well-where an essential motive can be clearly shown. It is clear that the industry is not a apparent. There are also some pro-nuclear submissions that are quite cautious about promoting development. We had a few more that inclined towards a sliding scale. One of the 94 pro-nuclear submissions published in the book was from a company or organisation called Peter Bowman, the nuclear Alexander Fiedag Geoff Russell and Osceola has send in submissions in general. Who is Alexander Fiedag and does he really exist? I could find him anywhere, so I searched his own submission where he is not listed as the writer. In fact, Alexander Fiedag's submission was written by 18 people, (B) light appears as the Company website as having been submitted by one person its attacks on Al Gore and climate scientists. In 2015, BI has also discovered the Anthropocene, again using this as an argument for no real action on climate change, and for the promotion of nuclear power.

If you visit the Breakthrough Institute's website, you will see a whole lot of fresh young faces, all apparently enthusiastic about the environment. BI offers optimism, hope and idealism but unfortunately, along with doing nothing to slow global carbon emissions and everything to slow renewable energy development.

BI's seemingly humanist and ecological message has much appeal in this worrisome world. So, the promoters of new nuclear reactors for South Australia certainly include idealistic and altruistic people — some of whom have bought BI's message.
